

Center for Health Impact

Culturally Responsive Care for Health & Human Service Professionals

What to expect:

The Center for Health Impact offers a Culturally Responsive Care workshop designed to help participants understand what culturally responsive care is and to equip them with tools to increase their ability to provide crosscultural care to diverse populations. This foundational course includes definitions, in-depth discussions on the complexity of culture, activities that allow for self-reflection of cultural beliefs and values, and historical cultural considerations. Skills-building exercises and tools for communicating across cultural boundaries are offered in a highly interactive setting. Participants will leave with a greater understanding of what it means to offer culturally responsive care and the importance of moving past cultural collision to connection and negotiating a successful interaction. Participants engage with the material through dialogue, polls, activities, film, small and large group discussion, and small group breakout rooms. We are happy to work with your organization and tailor our trainings to meet the needs of your staff.

Topics include:

- Definitions and self reflections
- Discussions including cultural beliefs and values
- The complexity of culture and how it plays into our access and receipt of health and human services
- Historical situations and generational trauma
- and many more!
